r/legaltech • vor 4 Tagen
EconomyManner4001

stop trying to replace lawyers with AI

here's what I'm seeing:

legal tech companies: "Our AI reviews contracts for you!"

lawyers: "Cool, but I still have to read the contract anyway to verify the AI didn't hallucinate. So now I'm doing my job PLUS babysitting your AI."

so now the workflow becomes:

1. upload contract to AI tool
2. AI generates summary/analysis
3. lawyer reads AI output
4. lawyer reads actual contract to verify AI was correct
5. lawyer does their analysis anyway

you've added a step not removed.

---

they don't need AI that "helps" with the knowledge work (reading, analyzing, advising). that's literally their job and the part they're good at.

what they need is automation of the non-knowledge work:

- manually copying deal data into contract templates
- chasing people for approvals
- updating status across multiple tools
- finding prior agreements buried in email
- saving signed contracts in 47 different places

this is the tedious stuff that wastes hours every week.

the best legal tech right now isn't the one with the most advanced AI.

It's the one that takes away all that low level work.

am I wrong?

251 74 Teilen

Deine Antwort hinzufügen

Sortieren nach: Beste Kommentare durchsuchen