With just over two weeks until launch day, I have a short preview and a review I want to share. The preview is a quick read (just the prologue), but it should give you a feel for the tone and energy of the book. You can access the PDF here.

Now for the review: Forgotten Twin received a great review from Dr. Dave Richo—one of my favorite authors. Dr. Richo is a therapist, professor, and author of How to Be an Adult. Here is what he had to say about Forgotten Twin:

"Matthew Sullivan Cox has done a wonderful service to us in this poignant book… I recommend this book as a manual about how trauma can be a path into love."

I've added the full review to the book's amazon page.

Speaking of Amazon, some of you have asked about pre-orders for physical books. Unfortunately, only the e-book is available for pre-order. The physical book page will go live on July 17th.

If you pre-order an e-book, I have one favor to ask. Go to the Forgotten Twin page, then search for a memoir like Tuesdays With Morrie by Mitch Albom, Blue Like Jazz by Donald Miller, Educated by Tara Westover, or All My Knotted Up Life by Beth More. Or just search for "memoir." Then go back and complete the pre-order.

Amazon uses shopper behavior to help categorize books. When you look at another page and then choose to pre-order Forgotten Twin, you are telling the algorithm "this is where this book belongs."

Thank you again for your interest and support. If you have any questions or thoughts, please reply to this email.
